

BALLOON MAKES FLIGHT OVER ALPS

EVIL FAKE ESCAPES

VICTIMIZER OF RELIGIOUS FEMALES GOES FREE FROM SCENE OF CRIME.

His name is Dennis, though he preached it in the wilderness of Kona that he was the Christ.

Gavin is his last name, but his first name fits him better.

He got away from the mainland coast in the Pacific Mail steamship Siberia on Sunday morning and the islands are glad of the riddance.

He has left a victim in the insane asylum and will himself probably soon land in jail. But, meanwhile, he has gone back to the society of freaks and fakes in Los Angeles whose sole object and mission in life is to swindle some poor half-crazed religious.

Dennis came here from the Los Angeles headquarters of a degenerate form of religious mania and fell upon Kona with another fake, a woman, the two doing a stunt supposed to represent Adam and Eve, preaching a bunch of rot which resulted in his being tarred and feathered and in Miss Beard becoming an object for human sympathy. Meanwhile the Los Angeles headquarters of amalgamated religious fakes had been receiving money from Miss Beard and from other local victims.

How Honolulu let Dennis, the arch-freak, get away, is a mystery. Nevertheless, he has gone, gone to practice his demonical powers on other hysterical females; gone to proclaim himself several kinds of savior, at so much per save payable in advance.

Investigation, if there is any way of making such investigation, will reveal the fact that there are several people in Honolulu, chiefly women, who are the victims of as foul a system of religious graft as ever existed, with headquarters at Los Angeles, of which methods this late departed Dennis to a too leniently treated specimen. Money goes out of Honolulu every mail to swell the exchequer of the Los Angeles soul pirates.

The attention of Sheriff Jarrett has been drawn to the doings of Dennis Gavin and his consort and the evil effect they worked in Kona, and Jarrett will communicate with the Los Angeles police in regard to the departure of the freak from Honolulu, so that justice, more than a mere coat of tar and feathers, may overtake him.

CASTOR OIL CHASER SAVES MARY FROM CARBOLIC COCKTAIL

WIFE OF MEDICAL INMATE OF INSANE ASYLUM ACCIDENTALLY SWALLOWS DEADLY POISON BUT TAKES EMETIC AS SOON AS ACID STARTLES HER STOMACH—YOUNG SON GETS MIXED ON TELEPHONE AND CALLS UP LUNA LAND.

Mrs. Atcherley, wife of Dr. Atcherley who is at present an inmate of the asylum for the insane for that he has been adjudged a paranoiac, imagining that deadly enemies are constantly harassing him, last evening at her Kalihi home accidentally swallowed a considerable portion of a dilution of carbolic acid.

Feeling thirsty, she went to the refrigerator for a drink and, through a mistake, got hold of the wrong bottle, one of the children having carelessly placed in the left chest a bottle containing the dilution of carbolic which was used for dressing a soreness afflicting one of the family.

Mrs. Atcherley discovered her mistake as soon as she had swallowed the solution and she lost no time in seeking an emetic, meanwhile calling to her eldest son to telephone the doctor.

Here was where the unlooked for and unnecessary excitement arose, for the son misunderstood his mother when she told him to telephone "the doctor."

It was the idea of Mrs. Atcherley to telephone for Dr. O'Day, the family physician, that he might attend her, if necessary, if the emetic should not prove effective, but the lad took it that his mother wished to see her husband and his father, therefore telephoning the insane asylum for Dr. Atcherley.

Mrs. Atcherley took castor oil, which acted as an emetic, and she was soon free of the possibility of poison, but, meanwhile, the alarm had been given through the mistaken idea of the young son, and the report got around town that Mrs. Atcherley had taken carbolic acid.

A police officer was sent to the Atcherley residence. He arrived there after Mrs. Atcherley had recovered and so reported her apparently in good health.

Such is the explanation this morning given by T. M. Harrison, attorney for Dr. and Mrs. Atcherley.

The report that Mrs. Atcherley had taken poison left itself readily to gossip, and there were those who jumped unceremoniously to the conclusion that the devoted wife of the afflicted physician had become despondent through his incarceration and was seeking an exit from mortal troubles.

Such was by no means the case.

Mrs. Atcherley, while devoting her entire time and energy to the interests of her husband's case, is by no means despondent.

Naturally of a hopeful disposition and being an indefatigable worker, she appreciates and realizes the task that now lies with her alone, since her husband's misfortune, to care for and educate their children. Her drinking of the solution of carbolic was an accident, an accident which she, with rare presence of mind, kept from proving fatal.

Except for the misunderstanding in regard to telephoning for "the doctor" there would never have been cause for gossip.

EDITOR SOGA ON THE STAND

Y. Soga, editor and manager of the Nippu Jiji, and a defendant, was called for the defense in the conspiracy trial this morning. He is an intellectual looking man, a fine countenance, spectacled giving him the appearance of a college professor. As he required an interpreter, however, his appearance on the stand has much less of the dramatic than had that of either Editor Sheba or Editor Negoro, who are both fluent in English and were not averse to showing off this accomplishment in encounters with the lawyers.

A large portion of Soga's evidence in chief was devoted to showing that translations of manuscripts found in the raid on the Nippu Jiji office contained passages that had been crossed out in the original and never published. In the case of some articles, indeed, he thought they had been withheld from publication in their entirety.

One expunged passage told of a trip to Ewa by some Higher Wage emissaries, who made a demonstration there which was likely, the writer said to have good results. Soga said the original did not convey the meaning of "threatening demonstrations," as the translation had it, but simply a demonstration. He did not know who wrote the article.

Very little of the article appeared in the translation filed as a prosecution exhibit. Part of the original which was translated was marked out, in fact everything that was translated was crossed out in the original. Witness scored it out because it was too radical.

Lightfoot did not think it necessary to read to the jury the passages expunged in the original, but as Kinney said if Lightfoot did not read it he would do so himself on cross-examination, the attorney for the defense read the extracts. "Let us stamp out these brutes," witness said was struck out of the original, and he did not remember whether the rest of the article was published.

Another article was shown, about which similar evidence was given by Soga. It contained such exhortations as the following:

"Are you not awake yet, you brutes? If you oppose the Higher Wage Association we will try to see that you cannot publish a sheet of your paper."

"Remember, there are dark nights as well as moonlight nights. I will fix you until you are crippled. Don't forget it."

Soga said he had not examined all of the articles taken from the Nippu Jiji office. Shown one article he said he did not know by whom it was written. The whole of the original was not translated. A part of what was translated was crossed out in the original.

Kinney's cross-examination did not yield the degree of histrionic diversion as had either Lightfoot's cross-examination of Sheba or Kinney's of Negoro, probably in part owing to the cool temperament of Soga and in part to his answering through an interpreter. He made little or no venture into the exercise of speechmaking.

JUROR YARICK DRUNK AGAIN DRIVEN OUT

ALTHOUGH HAVING PLEDGED IN COURT YESTERDAY TO ABSTAIN FROM DRINK WHILE TRIAL LASTED C. A. YARICK COMES INTO COURT INTOXICATED AND IS EXPELLED FROM JURY BOX—ELEVEN JURORS NOW TRYING CASE.

John Barleycorn committed contempt of court this morning, in consequence of which the strike conspiracy trial before Judge De Bolt is now dargging along with only eleven jurors.

C. A. Yarick, he of the "twelve good men and true" who promised the court yesterday that he would not drink again while the trial lasted, was the very dupe that the aforesaid John Barleycorn used to bring the administration of justice into scorn and ridicule.

When the jury entered the box it was evident to all observers that Yarick was not in condition "well and truly to weigh the evidence and a true verdict make."

Judge De Bolt took judicial cognizance of the situation and informed the jury that it was within the court's power to lock all of them up so that none of them could have access to the enemy that, put in the mouth, steals the brains.

Mr. Lightfoot, attorney for Makino and the other defendants, evidently did not like the idea of placing twelve jurors in durance between sessions on account of the weakness of one. He consulted with Mr. Kinney, leading counsel for the prosecution, with the result that an agreement was reached to proceed with eleven sober jurors and let the inebriated man go for good and all. This was what Mr. Kinney proposed but Mr. Lightfoot declined to accept on Friday when Yarick was reported as found drunk in a saloon by Bailiff Hopkins.

"Mr. Yarick, get out of here," the court said, "and do not show yourself here any more."

The derelict juror immediately hobbled out of the box—the unfortunate man is a cripple—and, picking up his hat from the bench close by, left the courtroom. Then the trial proceeded with eleven jurors.

POLICE WATCHING ANARCHISTIC JAPS

Eleven hundred Japanese are back to work at Waipahu plantation, while at Alea there will soon be no sign left of the strike.

Even less strikebreakers than yesterday went down the line this morning and, as stated yesterday, within a few days there will be no strikebreakers required.

There are those among the strikers who do not dare to return to the plantation, at least they will not show up at the plantations where they are known, for they have placed themselves on the black list, as trouble makers, and will not be accepted as laborers.

Seventy or more were turned away from Alea yesterday afternoon because they are not desirable workmen, but there are many more who have sense enough not to offer their services.

It is this element that may prove dangerous, for they are likely to be identified wherever they go through-
